

They Ain't Makin' Any More of It: Land Use - Agriculture, Conservation, Conflicts, Development & Energy

March 11, 2009 – 10a-12p
Waugh Auditorium, USDA ERS
1800 M Street NW, Washington DC

Agricultural Law is embedded in virtually all production, marketing, human resources, pricing, income, natural resource management, and related decisions facing the U.S. farmer, rancher and landowner. Understanding agricultural law is critical to crafting effective policy. USDA Economists, CSREES, RMA, C-FARE and the National Agricultural Law Center are co-sponsoring a multi-issue Seminar Series focusing on agricultural law.

Jesse J. Richardson, Jr. is an Associate Professor in Urban Affairs and Planning at Virginia Tech and an attorney in private practice. He is admitted to practice in both Virginia and West Virginia. His teaching at Virginia Tech includes courses in Principles of Real Estate, Urban Growth Management, Land Use Law, and the Law of Critical Environmental Areas. Richardson focuses on real estate, land use and environmental issues, farmland protection, conservation easements, growth management, karst issues, groundwater law, eminent domain and takings.

He received his B.S. in Agricultural Economics, magna cum laude, and his M.S. in Agricultural and Applied Economics from Virginia Tech. He received his J.D. from the University of Virginia School of Law, where he received the Edwin S. Cohen Tax Scholarship. His teaching experience includes service as an adjunct lecturer at the University of Virginia School of Law in Agricultural Environmental Law. He is author of numerous law review articles; received the 1999 American Agricultural Law Association Award of Excellence for Professional Scholarship and the 2004 William E. Wine Award for a history of teaching Excellence from Virginia Tech. He serves on the Virginia Farmland Preservation Task Force, the Virginia FarmLink Technical Advisory Committee and the Virginia Water Policy Technical Advisory Committee.
