The National Agricultural Law Center is Accepting Applications!

The National Agricultural Law Center, a unit of the University of Arkansas System Division of Agriculture, is accepting resumes from law students for hourly workers interested in legal research and writing in agricultural and food law. Potential research topics include, but are not limited to:

- Local food system development
- 2014 Farm Bill implementation
- Direct marketing of agricultural products
- Environmental law
- Federal crop insurance
- Mineral leasing for landowners
- Legal issues in grain marketing

Successful applicants will have completed at least their first year of law school and have demonstrated skills and experience in legal research and writing. Applications will be accepted from law students across the United States, as the work will be done remotely. This position will require a commitment of approximately ten hours a week, with flexibility given for exams and other events.

Interested individuals should submit a current resume and writing sample (10 pages or less) to Senior Center Staff Attorney Elizabeth Rumley at erumley@uark.edu. APPLICATIONS ARE DUE BY NOVEMBER 21, 2014.
